PREVENTING GAPES IN CHICKENS.

To the Editor of the Country Gentleman.

I have noticed for some time that there has been quite a discussion in your paper about what is called the gapes in chickens, and its cures. I can give an unfailing preventive if commenced in the early spring and persevered in. It was given to me by a very old woman many years ago, and I have never had a case of gapes among our chickens since I first tried it. She told me that if I would look closely on the ground in tne early morning, I would find a little red worm about one inch in length and about the size of a small thread; that the chickens ate this worm, were very fond of it, and it gave them the gapes. The preventive is always to feed the chicks before taking them out. Keep them shut up till the heaviest dew is off the grass, and this must be persevered in during the season. The failure in so doing one morning may give the chicks the gapes. When the chicks are let out without feeding they are so hungry from their night's fast that they pick up this little worm and it always finds its way into the windpipe instead of the stomach. I know these to be facts. Feed young chicks with dry corn bread, fat meat, when convenient, (never with wet feed or dough) and plenty of fresh water, and you will never have the gapes among chickens. I have a division in my poultry yard, and in the small yard I have a house 10 by 6 feet, made of old planks that were considered of no account. The house is set on posts about three feet above the ground. In this house I keep the young chicks and their mothers at night, until they are large enough to be removed to the large hen house. I feed them in the house every morning before letting them out and never have a sick one. I have found out that an ounce of prevention is worth a paund of cure. FRANKLIN COUNTY, KY.

---ART IN PLOWING.

A writer in the Tribune and Farmer says: Allow me to say that a good farmer cannot afford to have a boy plow for him. In the first place, it is not a boy's work to follow a team all day, or even half a day; then he cannot mend a balk by pulling the plow back; he cannot turn a corner properly for want of strength in his arms; and if he follows the plow. he never will have straight legs. So much for the boy. Plowing needs to be done in the best manner to insure a crop; any after culture, for corn for instance, cannot retrieve bad plowing in the first place. I see very many fields where farmers have for years commenced plowing on the outside. and continued to do so until they have raised quite a bank, and fairly dug out the center. This should never be done. If your field is level and even and you must plow in lands, have them of even width, plowing out and backfurrowing afternately, and never crossplow. And just here I would remark that in the old countries the land is always plowed in one and the same direction, and my own experience has taught me that it is a correct practice, always leaving the land more mellow and better disintegrated. and I think that is the object of plowing at all, where cross-plowing will cause the land to be full of lumps and

----TOP-DRESSING HEADOWS.

The first part of this month is a good time for top dressing the meadows with the manure made in the yards since planting was finished. The fall rains, which are to be expected this month, will carry the fertilizing quantities of the manure down into the soil at once, and the grass will be induced to make a stronger root, which will carry it through the winter and help it to a vigorous start early in the spring. Where land is not absolutely needed for cultivation it may be kept in grass for many years by an application of manure in the fall once in three or four years, and a profitable crop may be grown and the cost of breaking up and reseeding may be saved. If manure is spread now it may be harrowed a month later and will then be so finely pulverized that the grass will get the full benefit of it, and it will not obstruct the coming up of the tender blades in the
